WHEN YOU PUT A CAR IN PARK, you expect it to be in park. But after Jessica Mundy exited her 2004 Ford Explorer, it started to move. When she tried to reenter the vehicle to stop it, she was injured.

Harris Penn & Lowry, LLP landed a $40 million plaintiff's verdict against Ford, including more than $30 million in punitive damages.

"Not only did the jury award the verdict but because of our case, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration opened an investigation into claims that 2002 to 2005 Ford Explorers had a 'false park' or 'park-to-reverse' problem," says Stephen G. Lowry, named the most outstanding lawyer of the year by the American Association for Justice in its young lawyers division.

Lowry is also on the 2010 Rising Stars list. He's in good company. Partners Jeffrey R. Harris and Darren W. Penn are both on the 2010 Georgia Super Lawyers® list.

A REPUTATION FOR GETTING RESULTS Securing a fair settlement for its clients and helping to protect consumers in the future are important goals for the firm, which is well known for its successful outcomes regarding personal injury litigation cases involving auto defects, vehicular accidents, large truck accidents, child injury and aviation law.

The firm's litigation skills have become so well known that clients come to the attorneys for help with business disputes, including insurance bad faith, business fraud, breach of contract and intellectual property.

"We are lawyers who are prepared and will take a case to trial—on any dispute, whether it involves a significant injury or business dispute," Harris says.

LIKE MINDS Although the partners founded the firm in 2006, they have known each other for some time, mostly through automotive products liability cases. Today, their camaraderie—both personal and professional—works to their clients' advantage.

"We work together," Penn says. "We talk about our cases, we pair up on them, and we strategize about them all the time so we can put together the best possible trial we can."

Remaining small allows them to continue to stay in constant communication with each other. And that is key considering the firm's typically big cases, which can last up to five weeks in court.

"We only take cases we feel comfortable will secure a good recovery," Lowry says. "We tell our clients that we are going to prepare them for a trial. It doesn't mean cases don't get settled, but that's not our mindset."
